JUDGING CRITERIA

IDEA

The Jury Panel evaluates the strength, originality, and clarity of the project's core concept, including the vision that inspired its development.
A strong idea should demonstrate a clear design philosophy and provide thoughtful responses to the project's context, purpose, and users' needs. The concept should remain consistent throughout the design process and be successfully translated into the final outcome.

IMPACT

The Jury Panel assesses the project's overall contribution to its users, clients, community, industry, and the built environment.
Consideration is given to how the project creates lasting social, cultural, economic, or environmental value beyond its physical appearance. Projects that positively influence quality of life, promote sustainability, strengthen communities, or set new industry benchmarks will receive higher recognition.

DIFFERENTIATION

The Jury Panel considers what distinguishes the project from others within the same category, market, or typology.
This includes its unique design language, identity, creative approach, or distinctive features that create a memorable and competitive advantage. Projects should demonstrate clear unique selling points (USPs) that establish their position as leaders in design excellence.

FUNCTION

The Jury Panel evaluates how effectively the project fulfills its intended purpose while delivering an exceptional user experience.
Assessment includes spatial planning, usability, accessibility, operational efficiency, flexibility, comfort, and the relationship between form and function. Outstanding projects successfully balance aesthetic quality with practical performance to create spaces that serve users efficiently and meaningfully.

INNOVATION

The Jury Panel recognizes projects that challenge conventional thinking through original ideas, advanced technologies, sustainable strategies, innovative materials, or creative construction methods.
Innovation should be evident not only in the final design but throughout the project's development, problem-solving process, and execution. Projects that introduce forward-looking solutions and contribute to the future evolution of architecture and design will be highly valued.
